

Foreign Quarterly Review, Vol. 28 (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Foreign Quarterly Review, Vol. 28 It will be the object of the present Publishers, to retain all those exclusive sources of information at present possessed from the numerous correspondents of the Review in all parts of the World, to open in conjunction with them fresh channels, and to infuse into its pages such a general circulation of all points of interest and variety as shall render it an agreeable, popular, and scientific Publication. No cost will be spared to secure contributions from gentlemen, who occupy the highest literary positions at Home and Abroad; and to procure from them such articles as may, at the same time, both suit the taste of the British Public, and contribute to International Instruction. However difficult the combination may appear, the present Publishers confidently anticipate that they shall succeed in an attempt to make the Foreign Quarterly Review both generally readable and popular, and at the same time the Standard Authority for Continental Information. Time will of course be required to mature their schemes, and to get their plans into action; but the Conductors of the Review trust, while they preserve all valuable existing features, to indicate from Number to Number, a spirit equal to the rising exigencies of the age, and to demonstrate to the candid and judicious, that every effort is making to secure and retain the highest degree of excellence, and to induce them to augur favourably of the ultimate issue.
