

Every once in a while, God and Lucifer visit the earth and make a wager. Now it's time for the next one; the most daring yet, and quite possibly the last. "This venture to live as men for a full year had been such a hilarious idea to start with. Prove Abe wrong... again... then head back to their respective domains and gloat about it forever. Only it hadn't worked out that way. Things were different now. Having omniscient sight removed from him actually made Nick see things more clearly than he ever had. There's harm in getting too close to a picture, but a different sort of harm comes from getting too far away from it." What starts as a simple contest becomes something more as their newfound humanity forces them to reevaluate their relationship not only with the world, but with each other as father and son. Seen through the eyes of two men, on opposing sides of a family feud of epic proportions, each of them faces trials, heartache, love and real pain as they learn what it means to be human. Can old wounds ever really be closed? Can the past truly be forgiven? And can anyone ever fall so far that it's too late for them to be caught? "After the fall? You rise."
