

The Ten-Year Nap

For a group of four New York friends, the past decade has been largely defined by marriage and motherhood. Educated and reared to believe that they would conquer the world, they then left prestigious jobs to stay home with their babies. What was meant to be a temporary leave of absence has lasted a decade. Now, at age 40, with the halcyon days of young motherhood behind them and without professions to define them, Amy, Jill, Roberta, and Karen face a life that is not what they were brought up to expect but seems to be the one they have chosen. But when Amy meets someone who seems to have fulfilled the classic womens dream of having it all - work, love, family - without having to give anything up, a lifetimes worth of concerns, both practical and existential, opens up. As her obsession with this womans bustling life grows, it forces the four friends to confront the choices theyve made - until a series of startling events shatters the peace and, for some of them, changes the landscape entirely.
