

From a review by JP Karenko: No official summary was ever provided with any of the old Tom Swift books. However, without giving too much away, the plot can be summed up as follows: There is an old saw told in Economics 101 about a fellow who owns a buggy whip factory. He hears about this new invention called the automobile, and he wonders how it will affect his business. His financial advisor tells him check to make sure your insurance is paid up, and have a nice fire. In a nutshell, this is the central gist of this tale of industrial sabotage, subterfuge and sly shenanigans. Tom Swift has invented a device that seriously jeopardizes the existing theater and moving picture establishment. It is a large screen color TV with high fidelity sound. The Powers That Be are afraid folks will stay home and watch the tube instead of getting gussied up and paying them to see the latest movies, plays, operas and concerts in their theaters. They will do anything, from sabotage and subterfuge to kidnapping and attempted murder to stop this device from being marketed.
