

On the uneasy Pine Ridge Reservation of South Dakota in 1984, a single wandering full-blood Lakota ignites a brushfire of vengeful passions. Kate and Mara, white teachers at an Indian school on the Rez, are drawn beyond their fragile boundaries and caught in a maelstrom of dangerous romance and malicious purpose. Smoldering resentments of the Lakota people in the aftermath of the FBI shootings at Wounded Knee are brought to the surface by the revelation of a long-hidden murder. A cattle rustling scheme gone bad and a brushfire that threatens all the people of the Rez push secret loves and hatreds to the breaking point. Like the Big Badlands, the brutal core of the land, hearts are stripped of their coverings and left as bare and yielding as sandstone in a windswept landscape of the forbidden. Lakotachi brings the reader a stirring and passionate tale that rises from the harsh land and the conflicted spirits of the people who mix there. Timid Kate and confident, beautiful Mara find what they have longed for, but their love affairs are twisted by the unavoidable consequences of a history too violent for strong hearts to bear. It remains for the dispossessed, the lost, and the weak to show them the way.
